1. Not Sending Out Enough Emails

I'll often see guys complain that they sent out three, four, six, maybe ten emails, get a few responses, have a few conversations that go nowhere, then declare that online game "doesn't work".

Guys who pick up women in bars and clubs would never consider having four women be unresponsive to them, declare "picking up women at bars doesn't work!" and then pout and go home. Online dating works the same way.

Online dating is a NUMBERS game. You must put in the numbers. And the more numbers you put in, the better your results will be.

As I talk about in the first ebook in the Blackdragon series, How To Fill Your Calendar With Dates Using Online Dating, you should ideally be sending out at least 20 to 30 emails a week, every week, for a period of several weeks. Do that, and unless you have something very wrong with you, you can't not get dates.

Women online are picky and flakey. Just like they are in real life. Most of the emails you send out are not going to get responses. And this is normal. Sending out five emails and then waiting around hoping for some amazing woman to come knocking on your door is not a good way to get results.

Be proactive, and get those emails out!

2. Spending Too Much Time Talking To Women Online

This is the second biggest mistake I see guys make, by far. If you can just get a handle on this one alone, it will transform your online dating experience. I mean it.

A guy send outs some emails, and gets some responses. He responds back. They respond back. Then he responds back. And on and on it goes.

The guy is doing his best to be funny, cool, witty, social, and different. When a woman gives him a complement or gets flirty, he feels good. And on and on this goes.

The problem is while he's having fun interacting with women, he's not going out on dates and he's certainly not getting laid.

As I talk about in How To Fill Your Calendar With Dates Using Online Dating, women LOVE to “talk” to guys online. And if you let them, that's exactly what they'll do. Talk. Forever.

But is talking all you want? Or would you like something more from these women?

Then stop TALKING and start scheduling dates.

Never go more than three email exchanges with a woman without pitching a meetup with her. If she's stuck with you long enough to email back twice, the odds of her saying yes to a real-life meetup are at least 85%. If you keep “talking” to her without nailing down a date, YOU are the one wasting your own time. Remember that!

3. Over-Focusing On Your Profile

Guys spend way too much time stressing about their online profile.

The sad fact is easily 80% of a woman's decision on whether or not to email you (or email you back) will be based on visual things in your photo that you either can't control or can't anticipate. One of the problems with online dating is women are more picky about men's physical appearance, facial features, clothing, and photography style online than they are in real life.

They will quickly pass you by based on things like the shape of your nose, the color of your shirt, your hairstyle, or the color of the wall in the photo behind you.

So stop worrying about every sentence in your profile and whether or not it's cool. Yes, a cool profile does help, but it's not a make or break thing. Especially if you avoid Sin Number One and are sending out a lot of emails!

If you'd rather not worry about your profile, if you want specific instructions on what kinds of wording and photographs pull the most women online, it's all in the ebook, How To Fill Your Calendar With Dates Using Online Dating.

4. Seeing Lots of Ugliers and Getting Discouraged

This one I can relate to, but it's still a big mistake.

Let's be frank for a minute. There are a lot of ugly or otherwise unattractive women on those dating sites, aren't there? Yes there are. I'll be the first to admit that.

Often, searching for women, you can get really discouraged, even actually turned off looking at all those pictures of overweight or unattractive women. I understand. And certain dating sites have a higher concentration of these than others, and I go over all of the main ones in detail in How To Fill Your Calendar With Dates Using Online Dating.

I get it.

BUT, that does NOT mean there aren't tons of very hot, very attractive babes to meet up with on the dating sites! I have a personal policy that I will NOT meet up with a woman unless she is at least an "eight" on the one to ten hotness scale. Yes, the one to ten scale is subjective from man to man, but you get my point. I only date women who are really attractive, and I have no trouble finding PLENTY of these women on the dating sites. From online dating, I've dated models, actresses, dancers, gorgeous wealthy heiresses, you name it.

Think about it. Let's say out of ten women on a dating site, six are ugly, three are "acceptable", and one is hot. (I'm making those numbers up, but they're in the ballpark.) That's completely fine! Look at lots of pictures, ignore the uglies, and focus on the women you LIKE. Don't let the overwhelming number of ugly women turn you off to the HOT women that are there online, waiting for YOU.

5. Taking Too Much Time To Read Profiles

I've had a lot of guys tell me "OK, send out lots of emails. 20 or 30 a week. OK. But damn dude! That means I'll be reading like hundreds of profiles! That would take all day! Where do you find the time?"

I don't need to find the time, because it barely takes me any time. Online dating is, when done correctly (and usually it isn't), hands down the most time management-friendly method of dating women there is.

If you read every word of every profile that catches your eye, then yeah, it will take you all weekend to get out the needed number of emails to make this all work.

Instead, I do this. I do my search, and only click on the pictures of women I consider clearly an eight or higher. I ignore screen names and all other pictures.

Once a profile comes up, I check three things. 1) Her pics, to confirm that she is indeed as hot as I thought. 2) Her location, to make sure she's within 45 minutes of easy driving distance from my home. 3) Her age, to ensure she falls within my personal age requirements.

If she passes all three of my "tests", BOOM, she gets an email, and BOOM, I'm on to the next profile. It takes me maybe ten seconds to do all of this.

Remember, she likely won't even respond to your email. So why spend all that time reading her profile? Waste. Of. Your. Time. Once there's communication, or you've schedule a date, THEN go back and read her profile if you still want to.

6. Being Too Needy

Lots of guys have shown me samples of emails they write to women online. And the biggest problem with them is that they are oozing with NEEDINESS. Or at a minimum, “trying-to-act-coolness”.

They’re often long, drawn out emails, full of paragraphs and paragraphs of him trying to act cool, smart, funny, witty, well-read, well-traveled, successful, etc, etc, etc.

And all SHE gets from this crap is “Damn, this guy really wants to date me.”

Being needy, or indicating that you might be needy, is THE number one turn-off for women, both online and in real life. Women have high-powered neediness detectors, and when they’re online, these detectors are turned up full-blast.

Your emails should be short, fun, to the point, and NON-NEEDY. I go over exactly, point-by-point, how to do this in the ebook How To Fill Your Calendar With Dates Using Online Dating. It’s a very simple and repeatable process.

Remember, all women, even the overweight ones, are getting TONS of emails from TONS of guys when they’re online. What do you think most of THOSE guys are doing? That’s right. Trying to act cool and being needy, just like you probably are.

Needy guys don’t get dates. Or get laid.

7. Getting Too Excited About “That One Girl”

Oh, this one is the worst of them all. It’s a combination of Sins Number One, Two, and Six.

Here’s what sometimes happens. A guy will poke around, doing some searching. He’ll come across a SMOKING HOT GORGEOUS BABE. She’s like out of his wildest fantasies! So he takes an hour and carefully crafts the “perfect” email to her. It’s a long, drawn out email where he tries to be cool, funny, different, etc, etc, etc.

Amazingly, beyond all odds, she responds! Usually with something short like “Ur funny lol”

And now, the guy is ESTACTIC. ORGASMIC. He can’t believe how “lucky” he is! And now that she’s responded, OH MY GOD, HE CAN’T SCREW THIS UP. He thinks through every word he types out to her, obsesses over every email he writes, hovers over and analyzes every word she writes back.

...and wastes a huge amount of time, because he never ends up actually meeting her. Because she was so perfect, he wasted too much time talking to her (Sin Number Two) and got too needy (Sin Number Six).

And because he was so obsessed over that “one girl”, so concerned about “not screwing it up”, all the time, effort, and thought he put into one girl he should have been putting into many girls (Sin Number One).

If he had, he’d probably be having sex with one of them right now, instead of obsessing over why Little Ms. Perfect suddenly stopped writing him back.
